These little piglets found outside of McGuinty's office

TIM WIECLAWSKI
Metro Canada

FARMING The Ottawa Humane Society was called in to round up a farrow of piglets abandoned outside Premier Dalton McGuinty's constituency office yesterday morning.

The seven piglets were discovered around 7:15 a.m., in a makeshift pen with some food, water and bedding scattered over the sidewalk. However, the pen left the piglets with no access to shade.

The pigs were accompanied by bristly board posters and a stack of letters accusing McGuinty and Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs Minister Leona Dombrowsky of causing a crisis in the hog farming industry.

OHS inspectors are reviewing the incident and would not rule out the possibility of laying charges against the owner of the animals.

Man faked abduction, cops say

Heart-wrenching pleas for the safe return of 22-year-old University of Toronto student who disappeared after saying he was being followed by three armed men have been answered, but not in a way family or friends could have imagined.

An anonymous call led police yesterday to a St.

Catharines address where they arrested Furqan

Muhammad-Haroon Muhammad and charged Haroon him with mischief, saying he faked his own abduction last Saturday afternoon.

Det. Karen Hunte said the anonymous call came yesterday afternoon and Muhammad-Haroon was found a few hours later. "He was alone and he is fine," she said last night.

Muhammad-Haroon was held overnight and is scheduled to appear in court today at 10 a.m.

Last night as the news spread, community members were relieved but angry and upset. "I'm glad he is safe but shocked that he could have done this," said Yahya Qureshi, principal of the Islamic Foundation of Toronto where Muhammad-Haroon studied.

Report slams province for not keeping tabs on schools

Ontario's ombudsman slammed the provincial government yesterday for failing to keep closer tabs on publicly funded colleges in a report that found a northern Ontario school left some of its graduates unqualified for jobs.

Cambrian was not immediately available for comment.

'I was not motivated by hate'

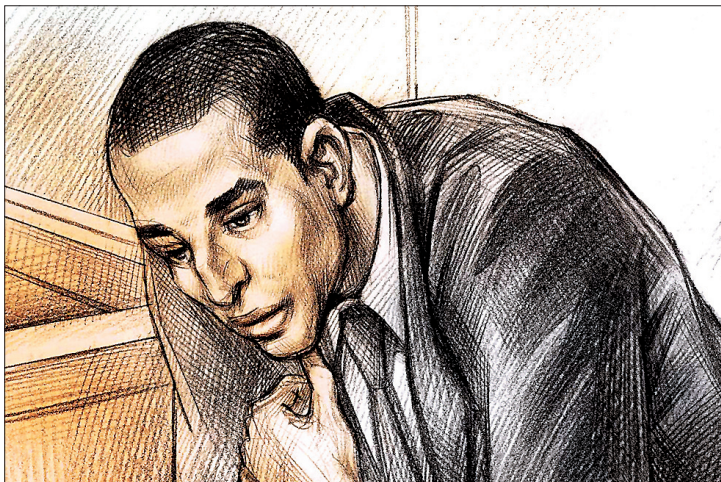

'Toronto 18' member apologizes for his role in terror plot

The Toronto-area man who took part in a conspiracy to blow up prominent landmarks in the city's downtown told court yesterday he made "a huge mistake" as his lawyer asked for a two-year prison term for his client.

Saad Khalid, 23, told a Brampton courtroom that he accepted responsibility for his role in the domestic terror plot to detonate bombs outside the Toronto Stock Exchange and CSIS headquarters in 2006.

Dressed in a black suit and pinstriped white shirt, and sporting the faint beginnings of a beard, Khalid said from the prisoner's box that he wanted people to know his true motives: His "disagreement" with Canada's foreign policy, specifically the country's involvement in Afghanistan.

"I was not motivated by a hate for Canada, Canadians, democracy, or Canadian values of freedom, civil liberties, and women's rights," Khalid read from a

Khalid was arrested in June 2006 while unloading what he and his fellow alleged conspirators believed was at least two tonnes of ammonium nitrate, according to an uncontested statement of facts entered earlier in his sentencing hearing.

One of the members of the so-called Toronto 18, Khalid pleaded guilty in May to one count of participating in a terror plot with the intention of causing an explosion.

The seven others have since had their charges dropped.

Express lane to York U crawling

TRAFFIC York University students who thought they would be getting a shorter trip to school this fall won't be able to hit the snooze button after all.

A new express lane for buses that was supposed to shave seven minutes off the typical 20-minute rush-hour trip to campus from the Downsview subway won't open in September as was promised.

Funding

• The $38-million project was originally supposed to be finished last year but got held up by delays in environmental assessments and funding approvals from senior governments.

And a new policy that would allow students and staff to use the same ticket for York Region Viva or TTC bus service from Downsview also is being delayed until January.

The TTC's Amalgamated Transit Union Local 113, which also represents Viva drivers, had some concerns and transit officials have agreed to delay the integrated service, said TTC spokesperson Brad Ross.

Toronto not as green as thought?

WASTE Toronto residents are putting only about one-half of their organic waste into the popular green bins, city documents show.

While the City of Toronto frequently states that 30 per cent of all household waste are "Green Bin organics," it turns out homeowners, on average, place just 16.2 per cent of their household waste into green bins. This information was gleaned from a letter sent to the Toronto Star in libel proceedings brought by top city garbage official Geoff Rathbone. A calculation based on figures Rathbone's lawyer sent to the Star reveal that Toronto, though doing well, has a long way to go before it reaches that 30 per cent target. City officials have refused several requests to be interviewed about this matter over the past week.

Cities like Toronto are working to increase their garbage diversion rates in the race to become the greenest.

Khadr continues to be a Tory thorn

Critics attack government's refusal to bring Canadian home from military prison

The Harper government is facing fierce criticism over its latest effort to avoid bringing Omar Khadr home from a U.S. military prison.

The government announced yesterday that it is seeking leave to appeal to the Supreme Court to dismiss a court order that it seek Khadr's return.

The move comes after Ottawa lost an appeal at the Federal Court of Appeal this month.

Ottawa has consistently refused to ask the United States to return Toronto-born Khadr from its prison in Guantanamo Bay where he has been held for seven years.

Khadr, 22, is accused of throwing a grenade that killed an American soldier in Afghanistan seven years ago.

Documents and testimony have shown he was mistreated by U.S. interrogators.

"The government of Canada has consistently stated that Omar Khadr faces serious charges," said a statement from the office of Foreign Affairs Minister Lawrence Cannon.

The statement notes that Khadr faces murder, attempted murder, conspiracy, material support for terrorism and spying charges — "all in violation of the laws of war."

It does not address the issue of Khadr's age and the fact that he was a minor at the time the alleged offences took place.

Opposition parties accused the Conservatives of putting ideology ahead of human rights and international law.

"This government has a terrible record about protecting Canadian citizens overseas," said Liberal Leader Michael Ignatieff.

"It is not just Omar Khadr ... In case after case after case they appear to pick and choose which Canadians they want to protect and which they don't."

NDP justice critic Joe Martin said the government has to obey the law.

"This government seems to have a masochistic streak about this," he said. "How many times do they have to be told that they must abide by the Charter?"

Ed Snook holds up Paul Crouch's ashes after Crouch was honoured in a memorial outside the Good Neighbours' Club at 170 Jarvis St. during the inaugural The Day of the Homeless.

A casualty of poverty and intolerance

HOMELESS Under the harsh sun and in the smog of Jarvis Street traffic, Raymond May fidgeted in the heavy suit he wore for his friend's memorial. He crunched up his face several times, in obvious pain.

As the afternoon wore on, he removed his jacket and rolled up his sleeves, revealing a faded tattoo on his left arm.

He maintained his composure for most of the ceremony, but when the Salvation Army brass band exhaled the mournful harmonies of How Great Thou Art, May, 65, reached for a tissue.

This was a memorial for more than just a homeless man; it was a memorial for Paul Crouch, 59, a former small town newspaper publisher, a husband and friend, a humorous, quiet man who struggled against alcoholism and paranoia.

It also unveiled an annual event, The Day of the Homeless, designed to humanize people on the streets. Crouch was beaten to death by drunken soldiers as he slept in 2005. Near the end of the ceremony May was called back up to remove a maroon cloth and reveal a burnished plaque that read: One of our own, a casualty of poverty and intolerance.

Todorovic to appeal murder conviction

COURT The girl who pressured her boyfriend into murdering Stefanie Rengel will appeal her conviction for first-degree murder, a family member says.

The close relative of Melissa Todorovic, who spoke outside youth court yesterday on condition of anonymity, said the family is seeking a lawyer to argue the appeal.

Marshall Sack, Todorovic's trial lawyer, has recommended that she appeal both the conviction and sentence, but said yesterday he will not be handling it.

Todorovic, 17, was sentenced as an adult to an automatic life sentence and must serve seven years before she can apply for parole — the maximum allowed under the Youth Criminal Justice Act for someone who, like her, committed first-degree murder when she was under age 16. Yesterday, Justice Ian Nordheimer agreed with the defence and Crown that Todorovic remain in a youth facility, as required by law, until she is 20, when she is due to be transferred to an adult prison. If someone wishes to bring an application to let her stay longer in the youth facility, they can do so closer to that time, prosecutor Robin Flumerfelt told the judge.

Access to the Toronto City Centre Airport (island airport) is yet again mired in controversy. A bridge plan was cancelled in 2003 by Mayor David Miller but now a pedestrian tunnel is proposed.

Please note, this tunnel is not a bridge

FUNDING Repeat after the Toronto Port Authority. This is not the 2003 bridge debate.

"It's like comparing mountain climbing and scuba diving," says board chairman Mark McQueen. In what way?

"Bridges and tunnels," McQueen says with an air of nonchalant finality.

After a moment's pause, he elaborates. Unlike a bridge, no taxpayer can call a tunnel an eyesore. Unlike a bridge, no sailor can call a tunnel an obstacle.

And in 2003, when David Miller was running for mayor on a promise to kill a proposed bridge to the island airport, Porter Airlines existed only in the dreams of chief executive Robert Deluce. Now, as the port authority awaits word on its bid for federal stimulus funding for a proposed tunnel, Porter is a popular entity that flies about 500,000 passengers a year.

"I don't think it's similar at all," Deluce concurs.

There is at least one more major difference between the tunnel debate and the bridge debate.

In 2003, Deluce and the Port Authority argued the bridge was essential to the success of the airport.

Yesterday, conversely, Deluce and McQueen praised the performance of the current ferry system, saying a tunnel would merely be a preferable alternative.

Burlesque inspires confidence

When Cheri Finch first considered taking burlesque classes the thought seemed intimidating.

A room full of women, flaunting boas, peeling off silk gloves, all the while oozing powerful sensuality, was not exactly commonplace for the 48-year-old corporate manager.

Determined to try something different, though, Finch ignored the butterflies in her stomach, took her first class and has been hooked ever since.

"It gives you a self-confidence," says the Calgary native. "It makes you feel good about yourself."

Burlesque instructor Coco Framboise, who runs the Coco Framboise School of Burlesque in Toronto, says indulging in the feel-good sessions is akin to treating yourself to a sumptuous dessert, without the calories.

"It's like the taste of a really rich piece of cake," she says.

A seasoned performer who has strutted across stages the world over, Framboise says in addition to tease and technique, burlesque is about telling a story and immersing oneself into any character of choice.

"I think there's something really exciting about trying on an alter ego," she says. "It makes the day-to-day a little bit juicier, a little bit more decadent."

Man arrested in slaying outside Brunswick House

CHARGED Toronto police have made an arrest in the shooting death of 23-year-old Sebastian Herrera, who was gunned down outside a popular Annex-area bar in late July.

Police said they arrested a man around 6 p.m. yesterday in his home on Glenholme Avenue near Dufferin Street and Eglinton Avenue West.

Detectives said they had been tracking the suspect for the past month before the arrest.

Sgt. Paul Sweeney of 14 Division confirmed to the Toronto Star the man was 22-year-old Marvin Jarrett, who had been wanted on charges of first-degree murder and attempted murder in connection to the case.

"I just saw it on the news," Herrera's father Enrique told the Star last night, adding the police hadn't informed him of the arrest.

"It doesn't matter to me right now. I don't feel OK right now. It will not be any help for me anyways," he said solemnly.

Friends and family said Herrera was "a good guy who didn't deserve to die," and was to start college in two weeks in the hope of becoming a lab assistant.

Newly jobless finding relief

But roughly half of unemployed Canadians not getting EI: StatsCan

A vast majority of the newly jobless are receiving some relief from the much-criticized Canadian employment insurance system, new figures released yesterday suggest.

Statistics Canada reported 316,300 more Canadians were receiving employment insurance benefits in June than in October, a nine-month period that saw net unemployment rise by 370,000.

While the figures are not a straight correlation, a

Statistics Canada official said it was clear a large percentage of workers who lost their jobs during the recession are able to collect EI benefits, giving a boost to the Conservative government's contention the system is working as designed and doesn't need wholesale changes.

TD Bank chief economist Don Drummond said the government could take credit for another reason — the decision to tackle duration of benefits rather than eligibility requirements. In the January budget, Ottawa extended benefits to laid off workers by up to five weeks to about a year in some cases.

Drummond said if economists are correct in forecasting continuing job losses until next year, the next flare-up in the EI debate will be that workers are running out of benefits.

But Liberal human resources critic Michael Savage said the figures still show the system is failing Canadians.

"We still have 1.6 million unemployed and half are not getting EI," he stressed.

In June, 816,600 Canadians, or 51.3 per cent of the 1.6 million officially unemployed, were collecting benefits. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Layton suggests he'd back any attempt to dump Harper

OTTAWA Jack Layton says Stephen Harper just doesn't seem to understand how bad the unemployment situation is — and it could cost him his job.

The NDP leader emerged from a meeting with the prime minister yesterday, strongly hinting he would back any attempt to bring down the minority Conservative government this fall. Layton said the pair had a "lively debate," but there was no sign Harper is willing to compromise on NDP Leader Jack Layton is followed by protesters yesterday as he makes his way to a meeting with the prime minister in Ottawa.

"fundamental issues" such as job creation, infrastructure funding, and employment insurance reform.

"It struck me that he doesn't really seem to understand — or be willing to act if he does understand — the depth of the unemployment situation and how it continues to get worse, and the urgency of an additional stimulus package to help kick-start job creation."

The Harper-Layton meeting was just the first in a series of political dances that could decide whether there will be a fall election.

Canada has done its share: MacKay

On a day of grim news from Afghanistan, Defence Minister Peter MacKay delivered a blunt message to the U.S. and other NATO allies.

If they're looking for more troops, they shouldn't look to Canada.

MacKay says he hasn't felt any direct pressure from the U.S. government yet for Canada to extend its combat mission beyond 2011.

But if that day ever comes, MacKay says Canada has already done its share and plenty of other countries should be approached instead to step up.

"I think there's a continued call to NATO allies for them to contribute more," MacKay told a news conference yesterday.

"But there are many countries in line before Canada that should be approached before they would come knocking on our door, I would suggest to you."

The comments come as senior U.S. military officers are going public with their demand for more troops, and admitting the conflict is not going well for NATO.

That reality was underscored yesterday by spectacular explosions in the province where Canadian soldiers are based.

News in brief

BREAST CANCER A new study suggests long-term use of tamoxifen is linked to an increased risk of a second type of breast cancer. U.S. researchers looked at more than 700 women who had been diagnosed with breast cancer and compared them to nearly 400 diagnosed with both a first and second breast cancer. Researchers found women who received tamoxifen for five or more years lowered their risk of developing the more common type of breast cancer that responds to estrogen-blocking therapy. But the study found the risk of another rare subtype of the disease increased by more than 400 per cent.

Modern twists on tragic love tale

TheWestView

Paul Sullivan

metronews.ca/thewestview

can't believe I'm writing this, but the Ryan Jenkins/Jasmine Fiore saga has a tragic, almost Shakespearean quality that elevates it above what one reporter called its "grimy glamour."

While its seamy details have cranked the reality TV/tabloid industry into hyperdrive, even threatening to replace Michael Jackson's bizarre addictions as the lead item, this story says something about our times and the people caught up in them.

Ryan, from Calgary, and Jasmine, from Bonny Doon, a suburb of Santa Cruz, Calif., were once real people.

Ryan worked with his father and made real estate deals in Canada's oil capital. He gave flying lessons. His was accomplished.

Jasmine, a.k.a. Jasmine Lepore, was once an athletic girl who loved dogs and horses and dreamed of becoming an actress.

Today they are dead. Jasmine's body was found mutilated to hide her identity, stuffed in a suitcase and discarded in a park near Los Angeles, where it was found by a homeless person. Ryan was the prime (and apparently only) suspect. On the run, he was found dead from an apparent suicide in a cheap hotel room in Hope, B.C.

Before they died, they both caught Hollywooditis, which is often fatal. It affects the heart and soul and transforms its victims into strangers to their loved ones and, I suspect, themselves.

Jasmine changed her name, got a boob job, posed for Playboy and married Ryan, a guy she'd known for two days in Vegas. Ryan became a professional lounge lizard, signing up for "reality" shows called Megan Wants a Millionaire and I Love Money 3, both VH1 productions that wallow in greed and soft porn.

Almost inevitably, these two fakes found each other and that's when reality (the real thing) set in, like the mother of all hangovers.

It would take Shakespeare at the height of his powers to capture all the irony that taints this story. At its core, a most bitter twist: Although Jasmine's killer — allegedly Ryan — pulled her teeth out and cut off her fingers to obscure her identity, the CSI wizards identified her by the serial numbers on her breast implants. Even Shakespeare would have a tough time coming up with that one.

If there was ever a Romeo and Juliet for the reality TV generation, this is it, a cautionary tale for people who think in 10-second sound bites or 140-character Tweets, rather than Acts 1, 2 or 3. The form may be different, but the outcome is the same. The lovers end up dead and the rest is silence ... at least until the next exclusive report, after these messages from our sponsor.

Word on the street: Is global warming responsible for the extreme weather happening worldwide?

Andrew Spencer

age 40, Toronto

A: Yes ... It has a lot to do with the industrial revolution that has put all the toxic waste and gas into the environment. It's an accumulation of years of neglect and greed.

Susan Travers

age 34, Toronto

A: I think so. I haven't done a lot of research into it, but I believe that scientists attribute it to global warming.

Nick Spagnola

age 19, Toronto

A: I believe so. Meteorologists are always saying that it's going to be a nice day and then it turns out being something totally different.

Robyn Carruthers

age 27, Ottawa

A: In broader terms, the larger trends ... yes, absolutely. The weather's changing, the climate's changing.

Sam Jomha

age 31, Edmonton

A: No, because historical weather patterns show that weather's always been like that, it's cyclical.

Tania Mondragon

age 32, Vancouver

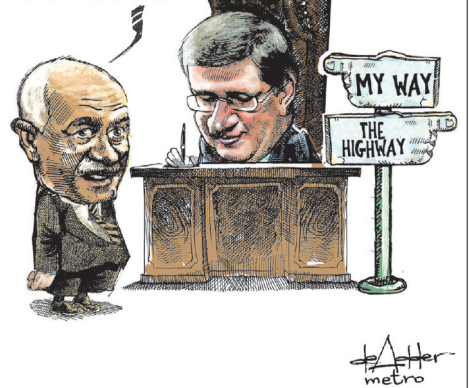

A: I think it is related. We've reached the point where nobody has cared about the environment for so long and this is the result. It's a wake-up call to all of us.

No rate hike expected

The Bank of Canada is unlikely to hike interest rates until 2011 because the lingering effects of the global economic meltdown will continue to mute both growth and inflation, according to a report issued yesterday by CIBC World Markets.

"While the 2009 recession may already be over, the slack it created is both large and likely to persist," said CIBC chief economist Avery Shenfeld.

growth to average above the non-inflationary potential until 2011," Shenfeld added.

"But even under (Bank of Canada) governor (Mark) Carney's more optimistic trajectory, inflation will still be feeling the downward pressure of a sizable output gap next year, one as large as we saw in the early 1980s and 1990s downturns."

He predicted both headline and core prices would cross paths in the second quarter of 2010, at a level well less than the Bank of Canada's two per cent target.

GM weighs the bids to purchase Opel

General Motors' top negotiator met yesterday with a task force of German federal and state officials as rumours swirled about the future of the automaker's European Opel unit. No decision or statement about the talks was announced.

John Smith met with the German government's "Opel Task Force" as the two sides grappled with differences over which of the two suitors' offers was better.

The German government favours an offer from Canadian auto parts maker Magna International Inc. and Russian state-owned bank Sberbank over an offer from Brussels-based investor RHJ International SA, because fewer jobs are at risk under Magna's offer.

Opel employs about 25,000 people in Germany, about half of GM Europe's total work force. German politicians have been keen to safeguard jobs ahead of elections in September. The government is a key

Men's coxed pair into world rowing final

POLAND Canada advanced to the final in the men's coxed pair at the world rowing championships yesterday.

Jan Tize of West Vancouver, B.C., Conlin McCabe of Brockville, Ont., and coxswain Mark Laidlaw of Mississauga finished third in the repechage with a time of seven minutes 33.77 seconds to clinch a spot in Sunday's final.

The top four crews advanced. France won in 7:32.65, Germany was second in 7:33.28 while Italy finished fourth in 7:47.39. The Czech Republic and the U.S. already qualified for the final by winning their heats earlier in the week.

"At no point can we assume that any of the crews are going to be out of this race," Laidlaw said in a release.

Laidlaw is also the coxswain of the men's eight, which booked its ticket to the final Monday with a win in the heats.

Meanwhile, the Canadian adaptive coxed four advanced to the final with a win in the repechage in a time of 3:53.32.

The Canadian crew is Anthony Theriault of Nanaimo, B.C., Meghan Montgomery and Stuart Starkey of Winnipeg, Victoria Nolan of Toronto and (cox) Laura Comeau of St. Catharines.

When the Canadian men's hockey team won gold at the 2002 Winter Olympic Games in Salt Lake City, Sidney Crosby celebrated as a fan like the rest of us.

"At the time you felt so lucky to witness that," Crosby said after practising on a line with Jarome Iginla and Rick Nash for the second straight day at Team Canada's orientation camp in Calgary. "To see the whole country celebrate the way they did, it was pretty awesome."

Four years later, Crosby was well on his way to a 102-point campaign as a rookie forward with the Pittsburgh Penguins, but that still didn't earn him a spot on Team Canada for the 2006 Games in Turin, Italy.

"Never in a million years would I have thought my name would be considered for that team," Crosby said. "When I wasn't there, it wasn't a huge shock. I was really young and still had a lot to prove."

Fresh off a Stanley Cup championship with the Penguins, Crosby has his sights set on helping lead Canada to gold in February in Vancouver at the 2010 Games.

"It's a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to be in the Olympics in your home country," said Crosby, who realizes there will be tremendous pressure on Canada to rebound from a seventh-place showing four years ago. "That's to be expected. If anything, it should be helping as far as motivation and making sure that guys are full of energy."

The orientation camp will help Crosby get familiarized with players he will potentially be teaming up with six months from now.

"The important thing about having the camp is guys like Sidney can get to meet the Jaromes and get more familiar with them, so when they get in that locker room in Vancouver they'll be very comfortable and they're not meeting their teammates for the first time," said Team Canada executive director Steve Yzerman.

Sports in brief

NFL Serena and Venus Williams paid a visit to the Miami Dolphins' complex yesterday as the latest celebrities to own a small stake in the franchise. Their deal, first reported last week, was confirmed at a news conference overlooking the Dolphins' practice field.

FORMULA ONE India has rejected the idea of extending sports-linked customs duty exemptions that would have made it cheaper to import equipment being used for the construction of a Formula One race track. India is keen to join the F1 grand prix circuit in 2011 on a course being built on the outskirts of New Delhi.

NFL Terrell Owens still isn't ready to play. Coach Dick Jauron yesterday ruled out Owens from playing in a pre-season game at Pittsburgh Saturday because the receiver is still nursing a sprained toe. Owens has been out since jamming his foot on Aug. 9.

BOLT Usain Bolt's agent says representatives for the record-breaking track star are in talks with publishers about a biography. Ricky Simms says he's negotiating a deal for a book for the sprinter but can't discuss many details yet. As for the scope of the book or how much of Bolt's off-track life might be included, Simms says all those aspects are being negotiated.

BASEBALL Ichiro Suzuki's quest to make history is being stalled longer than expected. Seattle Mariners manager Don Wakamatsu said before last night's game against Oakland that his nine-time all-star will not return today from a sore calf as the team had hoped. He is 16 hits short of becoming the first player in major league history to have nine consecutive seasons with 200 or more hits.

Reinsdorf out, NHL in on Coyotes sweepstakes

HOCKEY A group headed by Jerry Reinsdorf has pulled out of the possible purchase of the Phoenix Coyotes just as the NHL filed a bid in U.S. Bankruptcy Court to buy the team and keep it in Arizona.

Reinsdorf's group said it was unable to meet yesterday's court deadline for submitting a firm offer.

The group, in a statement, complained of an "unwilling seller" and "an organized publicity effort designed to provide negative and misleading information to interested parties."

The Reinsdorf group also said it had not been able to reach an agreement with the city of Glendale on an acceptable lease deal to play in Jobing.com Arena.

The NHL bid apparently was the only one filed by the deadline that would keep the team in Arizona. Jim Balsillie filed an amended purchase agreement Monday, offering $212.5 million US, contingent on moving the franchise to Hamilton.

If Judge Redfield T. Baum throws out Balsillie's offer because the NHL board of governors rejected his application, by a 26-0 vote, to own the Coyotes, that could leave the league with the only bid.

Ending on a high note

Canada's Little League World Series run finishes with walk-off win

Canada closed out the Little League World Series with a wild win over Germany yesterday.

Katie Reyes' two-run single helped Canada rally after blowing an eight-run lead to beat the Germans 14-13.

"I was excited. I was shaking," the 13-year-old Reyes, and one of only 15 girls to ever play in the tournament, said about going to the plate before her big hit.

Canada, represented by the Hastings Community all-stars from Vancouver's east side, finishes the tournament with a 1-2 record. The team was already eliminated from contention heading into yesterday's game.

Chris Holba and Matt Zembraski went deep during an 11-run fifth that put the Germans, a team from Ramstein Air Force Base, ahead 13-10.

The German club, made up of children of U.S. soldiers or employees, had not scored in its two previous games and finished the tournament 0-3.

Canada rallied in the sixth when Anthony Cusati hit his second homer of the game, a two-run shot that got Canada within 13-12. After loading the bases, Reyes drove in the winning runs.

She finished with three hits and three RBIs.

Hastings won the national championship earlier this month by beating Ontario's Lasalle Turtle Club 9-2 in Val d'Or, Que., but simply advancing out of their district was an accomplishment.

The club has little money and far fewer players than many of its rivals, but overcame the odds to earn the trip to South Williamsport, Pa.

No Canadian team has ever won the tournament.

BASEBALL Aaron Boone is set to rejoin the Houston Astros Friday, about five months after undergoing open-heart surgery, and will be activated when rosters expand on Sept. 1. Tampa Bay 7 Toronto 3

BASEBALL Carlos Pena hit a pair of two-run homers and James Shields won for the second time in his past seven decisions as the Tampa Bay Rays defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 7-3 last night.

Both of Pena's home runs came against Toronto starter Brett Cecil. The Tampa Bay slugger leads the American League with 37 homers.

Toronto second baseman Aaron Hill hit his 30th home run of the season in the third inning and rookie Travis Snider hit his sixth homer before a crowd of 17,307 at the Rogers Centre.

Rookie left-hander Cecil (5-3) allowed six hits and six runs, five earned, in 3½ innings.

The Rays, the 2008 American League pennant winners who are in the hunt for the wild-card spot, have won the first two games of the three-game series.

Film producer discusses the industry's highs and lows

RAF BRUSILOV
For Metro Canada

For Anne Tait, the journey to producing the Iron Road was a long and winding one indeed.

In fact, it was nine years long; though the endlessly energetic Tait is no stranger to arduous challenges.

The Toronto-born casting director, writer, director, broadcaster and producer has already mastered many roles in a long career in the entertainment industry. She was a senior casting director at CBC TV for years on shows like Anne of Green Gables and Road to Avonlea and has cast actors like Peter O'Toole, Russell Crowe and Helena Bonham Carter for feature films. She has also written and produced her own hit play, Yeats in Love, which played in Dublin, Ireland, and throughout Ontario.

Now with the recent premiere of her film Iron Road, Tait has finally conquered the role of film producer as well.

The film, which screened as a two-part mini-series on CBC Aug. 9 and 16, represents a labour of love nine years in the making for Tait who wanted to shed light on the harrowing story of Chinese railroad workers in Canada in the late 1800s.

Iron Road was produced in tandem with mainland China and cost more than $12 million to create, with filming split between Chi-

Producer Anne Tait and script co-writer Barry Pearson on a film set. Tait credits her Masters degree in English for helping her hone the necessary communication skills needed in film production.

Backstage Pass

"A producer has to have the financial savvy to raise money and the ability to understand the needs of creative people. You have to have a creative vision."

Anne Tait, producer

na and the mountains of British Columbia.

Tait says her experience as a casting director definitely helped her ease into the role of producer.

"Every actor has an ego and you have to have a lot of tact to know what different approaches to use with different people. A producer has to have the financial savvy to raise money and the ability to understand the needs of creative people. You have to have a creative vision," Tait said.

While Tait learned the ins and outs of casting directing on the job, she credits her Masters degree in English from the University of Toronto for helping her hone the communication skills necessary to successfully head up a film production.

Despite having succeeded as a film producer, Tait is not yet ready to give up casting directing.

"The thing that always interested me the most was choosing the actors. I love seeing wonderful actors get a role and seeing wonderful performances from someone unexpected," Tait said.

Tait feels like she deserves her break before jumping into her next likely project, a screenplay of her play Yeats in Love.

"Right now I'm feeling wonderful emotions — it makes up for an awful lot of lows. A producer is always solving problems and right now, for at least a week, I don't have a fire to put out or a problem to solve," she joked.

Blunder dismissal and pay the price

WorkplaceLaw

Daniel Lublin

Metronews.ca/workplacelaw

In life, seldom do small mistakes have large consequences. In law, that is not always the case. This is the tale of one Ontario company that just learned this lesson the hard way.

Despite having just lost her job, Kelly Stowar must have been elated. As an administrative employee, Stowar was not entitled to more than a few weeks' severance. Instead, however, she was given a letter by her former employer, Telehop Communications, stating that she would be paid five months' salary. Stowar signed her name on the space provided, indicating she was satisfied with the contents of the letter, and left the Toronto area office to go home.

A few days after signing the letter, Stowar returned to Telehop's office to return some of the company's property that she still had. She was met by Telehop's human resources manager and called into a meeting. Stowar was told that the company had made a "mistake" and that she would only be receiving three weeks' termination pay, not the five months that she was initially offered. She was then asked to sign a release, indicating that she agreed with the revised offer. Stowar refused, claiming she had agreed to a deal for five months' pay just days earlier.

Since Telehop only paid Stowar three weeks' pay, the parties next met in court. The issue for the judge to decide was whether the letter that Stowar received and then signed amounted to an agreement and, if so, was Telehop bound by its terms.

Upon dismissal, employees are typically given their statutory payments, which are set by provincial or federal legislation. Most are then offered a greater amount in exchange for signing a release, which prevents them from bringing any further legal action. That offer is usually set out in the letter of termination and it forms a contract, once both sides have agreed to the terms.

Here, the court concluded that there was nothing to suggest that Telehop intended to offer any further compensation other than what was set out in the letter it provided to Stowar. By requiring her to sign that letter, the company had done nothing to suggest that she wouldn't have been paid in accordance with its terms. Stowar wasn't expected to know exactly what the legislation said about her termination and it was reasonable for her to presume that she was "entitled" to the five months' pay she was offered.

As a result, it did not matter that Telehop's generous offer was actually made in error. The court ruled that once Stowar signed the letter, there was a binding agreement compelling Telehop to pay her in accordance with its terms.

"Upon dismissal, employees are typically given their statutory payments, which are set by provincial or federal legislation."

An easy transition from Home to Home

JON TATTIRE
For Metro Canada

For boomers and seniors, downsizing from a spacious family home to a condo or retirement community can seem an overwhelming task.

That's where Home to Home comes in; the Bedford-based business works hand-in-hand with clients to sift through belongings and provide turn-key moving services.

"They have all this furniture, all these collections from a lifetime, and they don't know where to start," says owner-operator Sheila Kidd. "I work with them to pick the pieces that they want to move and then plug in a few smaller pieces that will work in that (new) environment."

Home to Home takes care of all the packing, moving and unpacking, making the transition painless and possibly even pleasant.

With grand boomers leaving their empty nest, Kidd and her team do a floor plan of the new space and work out what the client wants to take with them. They then go shopping together to buy new pieces to update the style of the home. Home to Home works with the clients to sort through the remainder, sending some to family around the world, selling some in garage sales and giving the rest to charities.

Helping seniors move to independent or assisted-living situations can be even more stressful, Kidd says.

"They're maybe moving into 1,000-square feet from up to 5,000-square feet. This is a big challenge, with a whole emotional quagmire," she says, noting her nursing background with seniors is a big help.

Kidd is developing a website for the new and growing business and can be reached at 902-483-2593 or sheilakidd@accesscable.net.

If you're looking for an affordable rear-drive sport compact with a back seat, the Hyundai Genesis Coupe is one of your few options.

Genesis Coupe a real looker

JUSTIN PRITCHARD
for Metro Canada

During a recent summer-time hot-spell, I visited a local creamery for a giant ice-cream cone. While my artery-clogging snack was being prepared, I didn't notice the crowd gathering in the parking lot around the electric blue 2010 Hyundai Genesis Coupe. 2.0T I drove there.

Turns out this was the wrong car to try and eat an ice cream beside. The dozen or so folks standing around had plenty of questions — and my treat turned into a drippy mess before I could answer them all.

If you want the scoop on the Genesis Coupe, please read this FAQ. That way, other Genesis drivers can enjoy their summertime ice-cream in peace.

Ever sexy. Is that really a Hyundai?

It is indeed! In fact, it's probably the sexiest car Korea's ever built. It's a real looker — very wide, low, menacing, and detailed, with a fantastic stance.

You can get a V8 in this, right?

No, that's the Genesis Sedan. The four-door comes with a 280 horsepower V6 or a 375 horsepower V8. Both are automatic.

The Coupe gets a 2.0 litre four cylinder "world" engine with a turbocharger, good for 210 horsepower. There's a 3.8 litre V6 with 306 horsepower available. Both can be had in automatic or six-speed manual.

How is it go?

Not bad at all. The turbo four cylinder is a decent entry-level engine, though it's far from a head-pinning drag racer. Just don't go picking on your buddy with the Mustang GT.

The four cylinder unit is very responsive coming out of a light, and the turbo works nicely to increase responsiveness when cruising at a good highway clip too. Unfortunately, the engine is no pinnacle of refinement.

The Hyundai Genesis Coupe's interior is nice to look at, driver-centric without being crowded, and roomy.

Is that rear-wheel drive?

Yes! If you're looking for an affordable rear-drive sport compact with a back seat, it's one of your few options.

Rear-drive is a novelty in this market as much as it's a very real criteria for some shoppers. It has benefits in handling and performance potential.

What's the interior like?

Hyundai's created a genuine coupe cockpit in here. It's nice to look at, driver-centric without being crowded, and surprisingly roomy. The wide body means plenty of knee and shoulder room, and the back seats can actually be used by human beings.

What about the handling?

A nice balance between sportiness and comfort, though not quite an ultra-precise asphalt scalpel. The Genesis rides commendably and delivers the feel of balance and sharpness that attracts enthusiasts to rear-drive cars.

Do you like it?

Yes! But it's not perfect. The trunk opening is small, the rearward visibility is somewhat limited, and the turning circle is pretty clumsy. Also, the engine sound starts to invade the cabin at higher speeds.

OMG, I like, totally want one. How much?

With the four-cylinder, pricing starts at $24,495.

The PT Cruiser has been a hit with consumers since its introduction in 2000.

Chrysler to keep on PT Cruisin'

PRODUCTION Chrysler Group LLC announced recently that production of the Chrysler PT Cruiser will continue. The Chrysler Group Toluca (Mexico) Assembly Plant — the exclusive home of the Cruiser — will continue to build the quality-proven, versatility packaged and "too cool to categorize" small car.

"The heritage-styled Chrysler PT Cruiser continues to be a global success story," said Peter Fong of Chrysler. "With more than 1.3 million PT Cruisers sold in more than 60 countries since 2000, we're excited to announce we're re-energizing the iconic and award-winning PT Cruiser."

Chrysler introduced the segment-busting Chrysler PT Cruiser nearly 10 years ago. Its one-of-a-kind exterior styling and Swiss Army knife-like interior flexibility, offered at a compact car price, redefined the small-car segment and became an instant hit with consumers.

The latest flavour, the 2009 Chrysler PT Dream Cruiser 5 marked the 14th customized version of the segment-busting small car.

Mazda unveiling cleaner CX-7

The Mazda stand at next month's Frankfurt International Motor Show (IAA) will exhibit the new Mazda CX-7 featuring Mazda's new family face as seen on Mazda6 and Mazda3.

Also offering a bolder stance, the new Mazda CX-7 is powered by a high-output diesel engine.

The CX-7 debuts as the first Japanese passenger car to have a diesel engine fitted with a Selective Catalytic Reduction (SCR) system, which cuts NOx emissions by 40 per cent.

Mazda will debut a new CX-7, featuring a diesel engine, at the Frankfurt auto show.

This technology will be offered exclusively to European customers in the new diesel version of the new Mazda CX-7 sports crossover SUV.

Thanks to the compact design of the SCR system, the CX-7 Diesel offers users the same 455 litres of luggage space as the previous gasoline engine version, and it is user-friendly.

Joining the clean-running new Mazda CX-7 diesel in Frankfurt will be a host of other environmental technologies, including Mazda's fuel-saving i-stop system, and rotary hydrogen powertrain technology.

The all-new Jaguar XJ breaks free of the marque's old-world charm with a modernist design.

Brave new designs

AutoPilot

Michael Goetz

metronews.ca/autopilot

When it comes to automotive design, are you a modernist or a folk singer?

(How many folk singers does it take to screw in a light bulb? Four. One to screw in the light bulb. Three to sing about how much better was the old light bulb.)

Like most people, you're probably a bit of both. So designers are constantly trying to walk that line between imagining a fresh look, but one that also embodies traditions that every-body loves and expects.

The automaker that had the hardest time walking this line of late has been Jaguar. Until quite recently, its designs didn't stray much from those first envisioned by its founder, William Lyons.

Now take a look at the just-revealed all-new XJ sedan. I'm not sure most people would instantly recognize this new XJ sedan as a "Jaguar."

But Jaguar had to make this move. It could no longer afford to be only curators of old-world charm.

I think the best scenario for redesigning a nameplate: You notice a car parked in the distance — something new and exciting. You don't know what it is, but you like it. As you get closer, say 10 paces, you wonder if it could be the new "Wasfinger?" When you get right up to it, and before you see any badges, you know for sure it's the new Wasfinger. You really liked the old Wasfinger, but this one's even better.

You can definitely say Cadillac has been successful in reinventing itself in an all-new, modern idiom. The rear section of the CTS, for example, with its vertical tail lamps and creased fender line, is all at once good looking, modern, and reminiscent of Cadillac tail fins of the 1950s.

I also like Lincoln's new design direction. It's distinctive and substantial and very American, and not too overpowering with heritage cues. You have to use cues sparingly, like perfume.

I think that was the problem with Pontiac design — too much reliance on cues, like red interior lights, body cladding, and that split front grille, and not much else. Whew!

Finally, I think it doesn't matter how much retro you pile into a car design, as long as the bones are good. All good auto design seems to be characterized by only a few crucial elements: proportion; form following function; an aerodynamic look, and wheels that are pushed to the corners of the body and that fill up the wheel arches.

On the latter point, I once asked hot-rod legend, Chip Foose, if there was anything that didn't look better with bigger wheels and a slightly lowered body.

He thought for a few seconds, then said, "I dunno, maybe a house."

Michael Goetz has been writing about cars and editing automotive publications for over 30 years. He lives in Toronto with his family and a neglected 1967 Jaguar E-type.

"I love BMWs," exclaims Howard Glassman, a.k.a. Humble Howard, co-host of Toronto's EZ Rock morning show. "I have a man crush on them."

In fact, the beloved radio personality has owned several BMWs over the years — all 325i's — so he's in auto heaven now that he's finally moved up to the 5 series.

"It's like the grown-up BMW," he says.

Glassman bought his 2006 black 525i BMW five months ago second-hand. "It's in mint condition and it makes me look super-hot," says the perennial funny-guy.

He pauses, then adds: "If you knew me, you'd know how stupid that last remark was because nothing can make me look super-

"It's just so comfortable and it's fast," adds the father of two, who admits to accumulating his fair share of speeding tickets over the years.

"Because I go to work at four in the morning, I get almost all my speeding tickets then because you feel all alone on the road and you go fast. Next thing I know, I'm pulled over and I'm thinking 'what did I do?'"

A native of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, who started out as a stand-up comic before hitting the radio as co-host of the popular Humble & Fred morning drive show, which thousands of Torontonians tuned into each day for nearly 20 years, Glassman recalls with fondness the first car he bought when he was 16: a used Austin Mini.

"I bought the car in the middle of the winter for $900," he recounts.

"And I had it parked outside our home. The first big snowstorm we had, I looked out and I couldn't see my car. It was almost buried, it was so tiny."

Now that his oldest daughter is 15, Glassman knows she'll want to get behind the wheel of his beloved Bimmer.

"But I made her understand that it'll be years before she'll drive this car," he says like devoted the BMW-lover that he is.

Climate system that's forest fresh

Trust a Japanese automaker to come up with a high-tech alternative to the $1.99 pine-tree air freshener, the staple ornament of the rear-view mirror.

Nissan is touting what it calls "Forest AC," a brainy air-conditioning and heating system that controls all aspects of the cabin environment, from temperature and humidity to aroma, even germs.

"The system is designed to create the refreshing climate, fragrance and natural breezes of relaxing forest settings," Nissan says in its news release.

The technology is based on research by the Tokyo

University of Science into the effects of aroma on human mental activity. Nissan says it's the first automotive system to foster driver comfort this way.

Too bad, then, that Canadian and American drivers won't get to find out if Forest AC improves on the old pine tree or those little flasks of scented oil you can clip to your air vent.

The full system is being offered on the Japanese-market Nissan Fuga sports sedan, which arrives here next spring badged as the Infiniti M for the company's upscale brand, but without Forest AC's aromatherapy gizmo.

Humidity control

- Forest AC maintains humidity between 35 and 55 per cent while keeping windows clear, and it's precise enough to compensate for the differing sunlight levels from one side of the car to the other.

"We have chosen not to take it for the North American market," says Sean McNamara, Infiniti's senior product-planning manager at Nissan North America in Nashville, Tenn.

"We did some customer feedback here and there wasn't a lot of interest in it, not to the degree there was in the Japanese market."

So what are we missing?

According to Nissan, the Japanese-market system will be equipped with replaceable cartridges that alternately emit borneol, a compound of Kapur wood, lavender and other essential oils, and leaf alcohol.

Borneol, says Nissan, promotes calm and focus while leaf alcohol, found in most plants, is thought to have a calming effect and reduces fatigue.

While the feel-good wizardry is missing, McNamara says the Infiniti M will have Forest AC's other high-tech features to improve overall air quality in the passenger cabin.

Interior of the upcoming Infiniti M sports sedan, the first to feature Nissan's high-tech Forest AC climate-control system.

It includes an active filtration system that takes noxious or unpleasant fumes out of the incoming air using a high-performance filter impregnated with "natural grapeseed polyphenol."

Nissan says it is better than other car filters at removing pollen and deactivating allergens.

Toyota will introduce a new midsize hybrid sedan, the SAI, in Japan this year, according to a report by the Green Car Congress. The car is expected to have the same basic structure as the new Lexus HS 250h. CANADIANDRIVER.COM

Built in Canada, the 2009 Acura MDX (Elite Package shown) debuted in 2001 and has constantly been refined, keeping it a hot seller in the mid-size luxury SUV/CUV segment.

Acura's Ontario plant delivers one hot MDX

JIM ROBINSON
for Metro Canada

Acura's MDX mid-size luxury crossover (CUV) is part of a Canadian success story.

It is one of three Acura vehicles (CSX and ZDX) being constructed in Alliston, Ont., where the Honda Civic sedan is also built.

It's been a win-win for everyone involved and that includes the federal and provincial governments who never had to worry about shelling out money to Honda.

Introduced in 2001, the MDX (which stands for Multi Dimensional luxury) was the first mid-size CUV to come with a third row seat. Designed to do battle with the Lexus RX300/330, the MDX now faces a host of competitors in its segment.

The 2009 version is equipped with a 3.7-litre V6 producing 300 hp and 275 lb/ft of torque using Honda's VTEC variable valve timing system for a fuel consumption rating of 13.8L/100 km city and 10.0L/100 km highway on premium.

The only transmission available is a five-speed automatic with sequential SportShift mode that allows "manual" selection of the gears.

All MDX models are fitted as standard with a heavy-duty version of the automatic transmission and heavy-duty radiator with dual fans. That enables the MDX to tow up to 5,000 lb.

Cargo volume with the second (50/50 split) and third row (60/40 split) seats folded is 2,364 litres.

The integrated ABS and Vehicle Stability Assist (Acura's term for electronic stability control) also features Trailer Stability Assist that senses when the trailer is starting to wander and gets both it and car back on an even keel.

The MDX also comes standard with the Honda-developed SH-AWD (Super Handling All-Wheel-Drive) system that not only sends up to 50 per cent of torque to the rear wheels under acceleration but can route more torque to the wheel on the outside of a curve. At the same time, the system allows the outside wheel to turn a hair faster than the inside tire for a feeling of neutral steer.

All of this is visible on the Multi Information Display set between the speedo and tach. As the torque moves around it is shown by a series of gradients at each wheel in real time. So even though you probably won't feel it, you can see the system at work, and believe me, it's fascinating to watch.

There are three MDX trim levels starting with the base car, the Technology Package and the Elite Package as tested here at $62,500.

Only the Elite gets self-leveling headlights or a nine-inch DVD entertainment system for those in the back seats with remote and wireless headsets with surround sound.

There are front and side airbags as well as a three-row curtain airbag fitted on all models and this integrates a rollover sensor.

The navigation system on the Elite and Technology Packages features bilingual voice recognition and has a backup camera view displayed on the monitor.

It has a very solid feeling on the road with a surprising amount of "feel" coming through the steering wheel rim to the hands. The brakes feel "big" to the point of being almost grabby at slow speeds.

Clunker incentives

Hyundai, Chrysler do 'responsible' thing

MICHAEL GOETZ
for Metro Canada

Every day it gets harder to drive a clunker. At one time you just had to deal with the shame. Then you had to ignore the incentives offered through various government "scrappage" initiatives, like the current Retire Your Ride program. Now the automakers are throwing money at you.

Last week, Hyundai announced its Clean Air Commitment program, which promises $500 or $1,000 in cash (depending on which Hyundai you buy), if you trade in your clunker and consent to having it retired for good.

Three days later, Chrysler announced a similar program. It also raised the stakes; its minimum incentive is also $500, but its top one is worth $1,500. Chrysler also becomes the first "official" automotive partner of Retire Your

"With last week's announcement, we've seen more interest in the (Retire Your Ride) program."

Fatima Dharsee of Clear Air Foundation

Ride. (Hyundai is not on board yet, but promises to take your clunker to a participating recycler.)

Both the Hyundai and Chrysler money is on top of any incentive money they're already offering, and on top on any money already on the table through Retire Your Ride.

Incentive options on Retire Your Ride range from $300 in cash, to coupons that can be redeemed for transit passes, bicycles, car-share fees, etc.

Whatever which way you go, you'll need a suitable clunker to turn in — a 1995 or older model.

Retire Your Ride hopes to get 50,000 of them off the road this year. Fatima Dharsee, executive director of the Clean Air Foundation, which administers Retire Your Ride, said the tally to date is around 13,000.

"On average we were scrapping over 100 cars every day, which is right on target. But with last week's announcements (from the automakers) we've seen even more interest in the program. We're getting well over 200 cars a day now."

Hyundai was hoping that its Clean Air Commitment program, would not be viewed as just more incentives, in a market full of incentives.

"We're looking at this more as a CSR (Corporate Social Responsibility) Initiative," said Stephen Keller, president and CEO, Hyundai Auto Canada Corp. "We're not making a lot of money of these deals. ... We thought this was a good platform for giving something back."

Toyota recently found that its fuel cell vehicle is getting an estimated range of 431 miles on one tank of compressed hydrogen.

Pushing green miles

Toyota fuel cell cars go 693 km on one tank of hydrogen

Toyota has announced the results of a recent collaborative fuel cell hybrid vehicle range and fuel economy field evaluation.

The Toyota Highlander

Fuel Cell Hybrid Vehicle Advanced (FCHV-adv) achieved an estimated range of 693 kilometres on a single full tank of compressed hydrogen gas, and an average fuel economy of 109 km/kg (approximate mpg equivalent) during a daylong trip down the southern California coast. In mid-2008, the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE), Savannah River National Laboratory (SRNL) and the National Renewable Energy Laboratory (NREL), approached Toyota to participate in a collaborative evaluation of the real world driving range of the FCHV-adv.

On Tuesday, June 30, two fuel cell vehicles, two Toyota Technical Center engineers, an SRNL engineer and a NREL engineer completed a 532 km extended round trip drive between Torrance, California and San Diego.

Driving range data from each vehicle was calculated by SRNL and NREL engineers. The results were averaged for an estimated range of 693 miles, with an average fuel economy of 109 miles/kg.

For comparison, the 2009 Toyota Highlander Hybrid achieves an EPA-estimated rating of 11 km/L combined fuel economy and has a full-tank range of approximately 724 km.

With premium grade gasoline currently priced at about $3.25 US, the gasoline-powered V6 Highlander hybrid is estimated to travel approximately 41 miles at a cost of about $3.25.

Currently, hydrogen gas pricing is not fixed, but DOE targets future pricing at $2 to $3 per kilogram. Therefore, the FCHV-adv is estimated to travel approximately 109 miles at a projected cost of about $2.50 — more than double the range of the Highlander Hybrid, at equal or lesser cost, while producing zero emissions. FROM CARGUIDE

Safety nod for 2010 Kia Soul

RATING Having been on the market for less than a year, the 2010 Kia Soul already has won numerous accolades. Kia's affordable halo car now adds a 2009 "Top Safety Pick" from the U.S. Insurance Institute for Highway Safety (IIHS) to its youthful resume, selected as one of only 10 small vehicles to earn the organization's top honour for earning "Good" ratings — the highest achievable — in frontal, side and rear impact crash safety tests. Ratings from the Institute are based on results from frontal, side and rear impact crash tests. All vehicles must have electronic stability control available to be eligible. FROM CARGUIDE

Sampling the perks of paradise

Coffee lovers can go right to the source on Hawaii's Big Island

BY DAWNA L. ROBERTSON
for Metro Canada

Anyone who has ever visited Hawaii's Big Island knows its beauty is cut from a different cloth. What would you expect from a 4,028-square-mile gem that's home to 11 climate zones?

From black sand beaches to snow-capped mountaintops, Hawaii's biggest playground literally surprises at every turn.

While this tropical retreat is never short on recreational diversions, the cultural scene becomes even more robust each November thanks to Hawaii's longest running agricultural festival, which continues to stir up quite a buzz on the typically laid-back island.

Through the years, the award-winning Kona Coffee Cultural Festival, konacoffee.com, has garnered recognition as the pioneer food festival in Hawaii. Slated for Nov. 6 to 15, the 39th edition will celebrate with a Kona Coffee — Aroma of Aloha theme, paying homage to pioneers, farmers, artisans and the product itself.

Nearly 50 festival events will include coffee-based competitions, tastings, parades, farm tours, workshops, art exhibits and an outdoor concert.

Heading to Kona a few days prior to last year's festival launch, I opted to perk up a low-key day by touring Kona Coffee Country. Driving maps are available from hotel concierges, local businesses or by contacting info@konacoffee.com.

The comprehensive piece includes information on coffee history, industry standards and cultivation practices. For direction ease, it opens to a map pinpointing locations of Kona Coffee farms and retail sites that welcome guests.

American missionary Samuel Ruggles introduced coffee to the island in 1828, transporting cuttings of Arabica trees from Oahu to Kona. The area was a natural, thanks to its rich volcanic soil, ample rainfall, natural cloud cover and hard-working family farmers.

Picking up steam among connoisseurs, Kona Coffee consists exclusively of beans grown on the western slopes of Hualalai and Mauna Loa in a strip extending south from the village of Holualoa to the town of Honaunau. This delicacy is distinguished for having a full, rich flavor with balanced acidity, great aroma and long finish lacking bitterness.

More than 670 farms create a tapestry amid the 35-kilometre-long, three-kilometre-wide coffee-rich corridor. So with this Java 101 under my belt and map in hand, I hit the road.

First stop was Greenwell Farms, greenwellfarms.com, in Kealahou, one of the industry's oldest and most storied producers. The Greenwell legacy began in 1850 when Henry Nicholas Greenwell left England for the fertile soil of rural Kona. For the next 40 years, he and his wife farmed, ranched and perfected their product.

Today, the spread lies adjacent to the Greenwell's ancestral home, now occupied by the Kona Historical Society's Kona Coffee Living History Farm, konahistoricalsociety.org. Managed by family descendants, Greenwell Farms works 150 acres of the most productive land in the Kona District. As with many larger producers, it purchases additional coffee cherry from selected farms within the region. My tour guide, Kapua, described how the transformation from cherries into a full-bodied, aromatic brew begins with hand-planted seedlings. "They blossom into Kona Snow flowers, which produce bright red cherries that generally contain two coffee beans," Kapua explained.

Patrons eat at the Hotel du Nord, along the Canal Saint Martin in Paris. Away from landmarks, tourist crowds and flashing cameras, a few unusual guides will take you on eclectic tours to discover artists' havens in Belleville, fountains of famous gardens and eco-friendly initiatives.

Discovering the more eclectic side of Paris

Out-of-the-way tours take you to little-known parts of town

You've posed for a picture in front of the Eiffel Tower, checked out the Mona Lisa at the Louvre and walked to the top of the Arc de Triomphe. If you think you've done it all in Paris, don't worry, there are plenty of off-the-beaten-path adventures for your return.

Away from landmarks, tourist crowds and flashing cameras, a few guides will take you on unusual tours behind the scenes, literally, in a movie tour, or to discover artists' havens in Belleville, fountains of famous gardens and eco-friendly initiatives around town. Alongside curious locals, you'll get a glimpse of a different Paris.

Meet artists and residents

Just a few metro stops away from the city's major monuments lies an overlooked neighbourhood that's worth the detour, especially in the company of Angenic Agnero, who runs the non-profit organization Paris par Rues Meconnues (Paris Along Unknown Streets).

Agnero has been walking the streets of the neighbourhood for 10 years interviewing its residents. She now holds the keys — or rather the door codes — to many buildings, allowing visitors to discover a hidden side of the area.

Walking up narrow streets, Agnero reveals flowery inner courtyards concealing old sculptures, where artist installations and murals have been added. Once the door closes, it's easy to imagine you're miles away from Paris, in the quiet countryside.

Although unknown by many, Belleville has had its share of fame. Edith Piaf reportedly started her career here singing in the streets. Olivier Dahan's 2007 film La Vie en Rose with French actress Marion Cotillard tells the story of the poor girl who became the country's biggest star.

Working-class Belleville is now home to many of Paris' ceramists, mosaic artists and various artisans. Instead of lecturing on the area's long history, Agnero introduces you to her friends and shares stories. More details: The tour costs $17 US and is offered several times weekly; see paris-prm.com.

Water tour

A knowledgeable guide takes small groups on a walk through a chosen neighbourhood focusing on water. Although not obvious at first, the water theme is present everywhere around the Jardin des Tuileries, designed by Andre Le Notre, a landscape architect, in the 17th century.

Here, artists made rivers come to life through sculptures. The Loire and the Loiret Rivers become a man and a woman.

"Water has always been a problem," said guide Hugues Meles, explaining that although the Seine river provided plenty of water, it was also used as a sewer and unsafe to drink.

Outside the garden's walls, as if laid out on a map, eight statues represent the largest harbour cities in France. Marseille is a woman with grape headgear sitting on a boat, holding an olive tree branch, a symbol of peace and the Mediterranean.

You'll learn that the popular Wallace fountains used by Parisians to quench their thirst on hot days were named for an English philanthropist who was shocked to find out one had to pay for a glass of water in Paris. He built fountains around the city to provide free water to all.

More details: The tour costs $7 US and is offered several times per week. Each tour departs from a different area; see pavillon-deleau.fr.

Eco-visit

If you can spring for it, let

Erwann Maizy take you on an air-conditioned visit of the city of lights in his stylish Prius, recognizable by the colourful print of a gingko biloba tree, the world's oldest tree.

In the comfort of a hybrid car that zooms silently through the busy intersections, the nature enthusiast points out air sensors that help AIRPARIF, an air monitoring system, measure the quality of the air Parisians breathe daily.

Maizy explains that Le Notre designed the Champs Elysees in 1670 to allow for the sun to set at the end of it. Today, the Arc de Triomphe becomes a frame for the sunsets twice a year — around May 8 and Aug. 1.

On the avenue where crowds gather to see the end of the Tour de France, Maizy also points out the world's first LED-lit building now owned by French newspaper France-Soir.

With 100,000 trees lining the boulevards, Paris has become the most wooded European city, according to Maizy. As he drives slowly through the streets to recharge his car battery, he talks about the vertical garden at the Musee du Quai Branly and 50 other gardens most people don't know about.

More details: The tour costs $113 and is offered daily, starting at Place de la Concorde; see ecovisit-paris.com.

Movie tour

Led by movie buff and actor Lula Suassuna, you'll learn that one out of two French movies is filmed in or around Paris these days. Suassuna points out quotes on the walls of the movie theatre, famous lines from movies like "You talkin' to me?" from Robert DeNiro in Taxi Driver. First reading the lines, he then acts out parts of the scenes, setting the mood for the tour.

Travelling by boat to the outskirts of the city, the small group listens to the driver and his assistant talk about the construction of the Canal Saint Martin and Canal de l'Ourcq in 1808 by Napoleon. On the edges of the canal, people bicycle and walk quietly.

Going past bridges, with the help of Suassuna, you recognize one on which the sweet title character from Amélie spent afternoons skipping stones on the water.

Before you embark on this French cinema stroll, you'll probably want to see a few movies so you know what Suassuna is talking about, including Dobermann, Amélie, Hotel du Nord, Delicatessen, Le Peril Jeune and 99 Francs. Non-French speakers beware: although the guide speaks English and Portuguese, the tour is usually offered only in French.

More details: The tour costs $12.75 and is offered on Sundays. The group meets in front of the MK2 movie theatre on the Quai de Seine side of the canal; see tourisme93.com.

2CV driving tour

With the popular French Citroen 2CV car as your means of transportation, the tour, called 4 roues sous 1 parapluie (which means "four wheels under one umbrella"), takes visitors on a tour of the capital. The quirky tour comes complete with a beret-wearing driver. The tour starts at $30; see 4roues-sous-1parapluie.com

Private Paris

If money is no object, Paris Prive opens the most coveted doors. See the Eiffel Tower and Versailles after hours, get a whiff of custom-made perfumes in the city's most well-known luxury boutiques, or master French cuisine thanks to the help of a starred chef. Tours start at $565; see parisprive.com.

A weekend's worth of wings

National Buffalo Wing fest set for Labour Day

If you're looking for the place where buffalo wings started, you'll naturally want to head to Buffalo, N.Y.

And if you want to join thousands of other wing fans in celebration of the deep-fried, saucy favourite, plan your trip for Labour Day weekend, when the city hosts the National Buffalo Wing Festival, this year on Sept. 5-6.

Last year's wing fest drew over 78,000 people for events that include professional eating contests and sauce competitions. Wings are offered in an endless variety of flavours with sauces ranging from mild to suicidal, and there's even an event in which contestants bob for wings in a pool of blue cheese.

Bottles of Frank's Red-Hot, billed as the Official Wing Sauce of the National Buffalo Wing Festival, will be given away from a booth at the festival. The company's celebrity chef and spokesman, Kevin

Roberts, will be appearing in a celebrity chef challenge with the festival founder, Drew Cerza. Roberts will also take part in cooking demonstrations featuring RedHot recipes. Buffalo's Anchor Bar and its founders, Frank and Teresa Bellissimo, created Buffalo wings in 1964. Since then, wings have gone from a tavern snack to a mainstream restaurant menu item, with entire food chains built around their sale.

Get the goods on gay-friendly travel

EMMA E. FORREST
Metro World News

Gay and lesbian holiday-makers are usually on the same basic mission as their straight friends: We all want to let our hair down by doing something we enjoy on our time off from work.

Some of us are looking for a hedonistic week of non-stop clubbing, but others want to chill out in boutique hotels, have a holiday romance, eat fabulous meals, get outdoors, explore exotic locations, go sunbathing or shop until we drop.

The difference is that if you are gay or lesbian, you have to think carefully about your destination. Holiday time is precious, so you don't want to invest your hard-earned time and money in a destination, hotel or even an airline that doesn't make you feel welcome. You want to be able to hang out with your partner without encountering abuse from locals. If you're gay or lesbian, you aren't looking for special treatment — you just want to find a place where you can expect the same respect given to all customers.

There are countries where homosexuality is illegal, including several Caribbean, Middle-Eastern and African countries, but there are also plenty of Berlin and even Zurich. Gay travellers are an adventurous lot. It's well-documented that they were the key demographic to keep flying when straight travellers stayed at home after 9-11.

And it's a market that could prove invaluable to the travel industry during the current economic crisis.

"Despite rising gas prices and the downturn in the economy, gay travellers are more likely than straights to continue with their vacation plans," says gay tourism expert Jeff Guarancino, the vice president of the Greater Philadelphia Tourism Marketing Corporation, a city that's shooting up the gay travel charts thanks to its dynamic calendar of gay events and the 72 rainbow street signs signalling its "gaybourhood."

Travel companies would do well to court gay travellers right now: They travel frequently, are brand-loyal and spend nearly double what their heterosexual counterparts spend on holiday.

The gay and lesbian community in the USA alone spends a staggering $75 billion US per year on travel, explains John Tanzella, executive director of the IGLTA, the International Gay and Lesbian Travel Association (igлта.org), the umbrella group for the most gay-friendly travel companies in the world.

"Gays love travel deals," says Guarancino. "And because they largely don't have children at home, they can more easily take advantage of last-minute, off-season and high-season offers. Gay travellers are savvy, so those travel companies, hotels and destinations that have been sincerely committed to gay and lesbian tourism will fare much better than those who will see an opportunity to go after the 'pink dollar' opportunistically."

It makes sense for travel industry players including hotels, tourist boards and airlines are keen to court the gay traveller. Hilton, Accor hotels, American Airlines (aa.com/rainbow), and British Airways have been certified by the IGLTA scheme. They train their staff to be gay traveller-friendly, offer same-sex partnership benefits and market their products in gay magazines.

No-go zones

- Gay travellers should be aware that homosexuality is illegal in Barbados, Dominica, Grenada, Jamaica, St. Kitts, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Trinidad and Tobago, Morocco, Tunisia, Gambia, Ghana, Mauritius, Mozambique, Kenya, Namibia, Botswana, Lebanon, Oman, UAE (Dubai), Syria, India, Maldives and Malaysia.

METRO WORLD NEWS

Then of course there are plenty of tour operators specializing in travel for gay and lesbians, offering everything from cultural expeditions to hedonistic party cruises. "Adventure travel as well as eco- and volun-tourism are quite popular now," says Tanzella. "Cruises continue to be popular as do Pride events and other GLBT events such as film festivals."

"Gay cruises are hot," adds Guarancino, pointing to the success of the fifth anniversary of Rosie O'Donnell's celebrity gay family cruises run by her GL travel company, R Family Vacations (rfamilyvacations.com).

There are endless reasons to treat yourself to a trip — from gay pride parades and gay and lesbian film festivals, to international gay sporting events.

And of course as more and more countries have opened themselves up to same-sex civil partnerships, the gay honeymoon and wedding markets have also boomed.

In addition to the Hawaii islands' many celebrated charms, visitors can enjoy the delights of locally grown coffee. The annual Kona Coffee Cultural Festival takes place Nov. 6 to 15 on the Big Island.

An island of percolated perfection

Those producing a single bean are referred to as peaberries — considered top crop with a more concentrated flavor leaving a tingle on the tongue.

We then headed to the drying area where beans are pulped, dried and hulled to remove their parchment. Mill machinery sorts the beans into distinctive grades based on size and shape.

With a selection of savory souvenirs I purchased at Greenwell's retail shop, I set off for Mountain Thunder, mountainthunder.com, a five-acre organic farm in Kainaliu. Here, visitors can tour, taste and purchase organic Kona Coffee and green tea grown at 3,200 feet on the slopes of Hualalai. But it's the quality that elevates Mountain Thunder to even greater heights.

Owner Trent Bateman's commitment to the environment, technology and his family are key ingredients that give Mountain Thunder's 100 per cent organic Kona Coffee its true flavor. Bateman believed in the health benefits of foods grown free from harmful herbicides and additives well before organic farming became the mainstream staple it is today.

During a typical farm tour, visitors might be served a cup of coffee by

"There are hundreds of farms producing. So the variety inspires tasters to discover their palate's most desirable flavour."

Malia Bolton, Kona Coffee & Tea Company

Bateman's wife Lisa, or learn how to roast coffee beans from Bateman himself. Their daughter, Brooke, serves as company roastmaster, and has developed a line of coffee and tea-infused beauty products sold on-site.

The Batemans even employ families of Chinese Geese, St. Croix Sheep and Kona Nightingale Donkeys to help weed the grounds and nuzzle up to visitors — not to mention provide plenty of free organic fertilizer.

Next, I headed further along Highway 11 to Kona Joe Coffee, konajoe.com, in Kainaliu. Established in 1997, the family-owned 20-acre estate has taken a page from wine vineyards by growing its cherries on trellises. The brainchild of owner Joe Alban, the process trains trees by years of meticulous pruning to grow sideways and upward over the patented system.

"It's well worth the effort because trees develop with more uniform sun exposure resulting in more even ripening of the coffee cherry," remarked the tasting room hostess. Aside from a mean cup of Joe,

Kona Joe's setting was worth the jaunt. Acres of coffee trees sprawled below the tasting room, with the blue Pacific as a backdrop.

With a few more farms and quite a few more cups of coffee fueling the afternoon, I was compelled to make a final stop at Kona Coffee & Tea Company's retail outlet near the Kona International Airport at Keahole on Queen Kaahumanu Highway, konacoffeeandtea.com.

According to Malia Bolton, director of operations, comparing Kona Coffee to Napa's wine industry is natural.

"We're both regions producing fine quality beverages," she said. "And we share the reputation of coupling these products with memorable experiences."

Bolton added that one of the greatest misconceptions is that there is only one Kona Coffee. "So many people don't understand what a big business this is," she explained.

"There are hundreds of farms producing. So the variety inspires tasters to discover their palate's most desirable flavour."

Return of 3-D thrills

Film format has produced its share of gimmicks and gags

PHIL BROWN
for Metro Canada

With 3-D movies slowly taking over multiplexes and glasses-free 3-D televisions only a few years away, it seems like the format is entering a renaissance.

Given all the hype surrounding 3-D, it's easy to forget that it was once regarded as little more than a gimmick used to bump up the grosses of B-grade sci-fi and horror movies.

This weekend's The Final Destination returns 3-D back to its roots by enlivening a cheesy horror film with visual 3-D gags. With that in mind, we take a look back at some of the great — and not-so-great — horror films and thrillers to be released in 3-D.

The Creature From The Black Lagoon (1954) This classic Universal monster movie has been a staple of costume parties and horror-themed toys for years. But it's often forgotten that the original film was one of the great 3-D hits of the '50s. Though the monster itself is still one of the most memorable to ever be put on screen, the movie is probably best viewed today for nostalgia and camp value.

Dial M For Murder (1954)

Final Destination returns 3-D back to its roots by enlivening a cheesy horror film with visual 3-D gags.

Alfred Hitchcock briefly dabbled in 3-D with this classic stage adaptation. Rather than simply using 3-D to prod at the audience with pointy objects, Hitchcock used it subtly to create a picture box image that recreated the appearance of watching a stage play. Hitchcock's careful depth-focused framing is quite atmospheric, and yes the master of suspense does include a few pop-up effects to make the audience jump (how could he resist?). Even though the movie represents one of the most effective examples of 3-D filmmaking, it's rarely screened in its original format.

Andy Warhol's Flesh For Frankenstein (1973) This

Movie feature

Andy Warhol produced, Paul Morrissey directed trashy horror flick is a self-conscious camp classic. Every scene features hilariously convoluted dialogue, ridiculously over the top acting, and buckets of fake blood. The quite funny and oddly sexualized Frankenstein reboot should really be seen in any format, but thrives in 3-D where it's just that much sillier. You haven't lived until you've seen Udo Kier deliver his endless dying monologue while a giant spike pokes through his chest, dangling his heart over the audience. Priceless.

Jaws 3-D (1983) and Friday The 13th 3-D (1982)

For a while, horror franchises couldn't resist releasing their third film outings in 3-D (the title change was just too easy). Jaws 3 and Friday The 13th Part 3 are probably the most famous examples. Both movies are filled with 3-D gags and little else, but have barely been seen in 3-D since the '80s. Instead, generations of kids have simply wondered why stuff keeps jutting out towards the camera for no apparent reason.

The Final Destination hits theatres on Friday

Flashpoint sets record with 19 Gemini Awards

Flashpoint, the slick Toronto-set crime drama that airs on both sides of the border, leads the pack going into this year's Gemini Awards with a record 19 nominations.

Flashpoint was recognized in the top categories, with nods for best drama, best direction and best writing. Stars Hugh Dillon, Enrico Colantoni and Amy Jo Johnson received acting nominations.

The best guest star in a drama series is also dominated by Flashpoint. Four of the five nominees in that category are from the show: Nicholas Campbell, Henry Czerny, Mpho Koaho and Ron Lea. The fifth nominee is Damir Andrei from Being Erica.

The other contenders for best drama are: Being Erica, The Border, The Tudors and ZOS: Zone of Separation.

The Tudors, the steamy CBC show about King Henry VIII, was well behind Flashpoint with 11 nominations, while Being Erica, Diamonds, Less Than Kind and The Border each received nine.

Comedy nominees included Less Than Kind, Rick Mercer Report, Testes, This Hour Has 22 Minutes and Three Chords From the Truth.

Competing for the title of best reality show are: DisBand, Dragons' Den, GoldMind, Project Runway Canada and The Week the Women Went.

Jet fuel up for return

Australian group reunites to make high-energy disc

BRYAN BORZYKOWSKI
for Metro Canada

Jet drummer Chris Sester is on the phone outside of a Ramones museum in Berlin. In a few hours the band will play there, but unfortunately they're not covering a song by the legendary punk band. "That would have been great," says Sester, "but we had no time. We're probably the busiest right now than we've ever been."

That's saying a lot, considering the Australian rock foursome dominated the world's music scene in 2003, after they released their huge hit single Are You Gonna Be My Girl. However, Sester isn't actually sure if the band really is busier now than they were back then.

"I don't know if that's right because I can't remember," he says. "For three years it was just one long after party."

Sester sounds like he's joking, but he's not. After Get Born soared up the charts six years ago the group started living the rock 'n' roll high life. They abused drugs, alcohol and Jet's new album, Shaka Rock, was released this week.

partied almost every night.

The band still managed to release Shine On in 2006, but it was a critical and commercial failure (at least compared to their multi-platinum debut). Soon enough the non-stop excess took its toll on the group and Jet, which includes Sester's brother Nic on vocals, parted ways.

"There was a period there where I didn't know what was happening," the drummer recalls. "I wasn't speaking to my brother. I didn't even know if he would answer the phone if I called."

About six months after the group split up Sester received a call from guitarist Cam Muncey. "He's like, 'what are you doing? I'm bored out of my brain.

Are we going to do this?'" And just like that the band members convened in New York and showed each other all the songs they had been working on during their downtime.

Eventually the band entered the studio and recorded their third disc Shaka Rock. It's another high-energy rock record, though it's far more infectious and engaging than Shine On.

Even though this doesn't sound like a new band, in a way it is. Sester points out that in order to keep Jet alive, the band had to ditch their label and all the hangers on that enabled their out-of-control lifestyle.

"One of our provisions was that we had to do

"We just decided we needed to start again. We produced the record ourselves, didn't record in L.A. and we didn't spend a ton of money."

everything differently," he explains. "We fired everyone that worked for us. We just decided we needed to start again. We produced the record ourselves, didn't record in L.A. and we didn't spend a ton of money."

It's clear, just from listening to Sester speak, how excited the band is to be back on the road. And he says they're all getting a long really well — though it's still going to take some time before the friendships are fully repaired.

"I told my brother recently that everyone is getting a long so great, we should move back into the same city instead of living in four different countries," Sester reveals. "He responded, 'Don't push your luck. Let's just take it slow.'"

Simon signs up for mass murder

Simon Pegg has reportedly signed up to star in Burke and Hare, a black comedy based on the true story of William Burke and William Hare, who sold the corpses of their 17 murder victims to the Edinburgh Medical College for dissection in 1827 and 1828. FEMALEFIRST.CO.UK

The Incredible Ferrigno hitting T.O.

RAF BRUSILLOW
for Metro Canada

Lou Ferrigno could probably snap you in half but he's more likely to offer a helping hand.

Most famous for his portrayal of The Hulk in the cult-classic television series of the same name, Ferrigno is a gentle giant in the truest sense of the phrase.

The bodybuilder and actor will be in Toronto this week for Fan Expo and says Canadian fans are no slouches when it comes to pop culture knowledge.

"I just love the fans in Canada and I love coming to Toronto — the fans down there really know who you are. It's a blast," Ferrigno said.

Ferrigno also has another special connection to Toronto: in 1976 he played professional football with the Toronto Argonauts for a few games before dropping pro sports and joining the cast of The Hulk.

A huge fan of comic book characters when he

"I love coming to Toronto — the fans ... really know who you are. It's a blast."
Lou Ferrigno

was young, especially Spiderman and The Hulk, Ferrigno muses the reason superheroes like The Hulk stay popular is because they grant a sense of empowerment to kids forced to otherwise fend for themselves.

"Comic book heroes are connected with power and kids are fascinated with that power because many of them have no defences. From heroes they can draw in inner power, an inner strength," Ferrigno said.

Sometime those heroes might even become real — since 2006 Ferrigno has volunteered as a part-time reserve deputy officer with the sheriff's department in Los Angeles, California. Even without the Hulk makeup, Ferrigno gets attention — and of course his size and stature gets plenty of respect. It's all a part of much more sensible life-plan than most celebrities tend to muster.

"What drives me? My family, a good life, helping people, changing people and being a good person," he said.

While Ferrigno enjoys the recognition and exposure fame brings, his favourite run-ins with fans are the ones where they show him photos of how much weight they've lost and tell him The Hulk was their inspiration for getting into shape.

Ferrigno himself hasn't lost the fire for working out and he even has a new reality show in production tentatively titled The Incredible Ferrignos, in which he and his wife help couples and families shape up and get fit. It's all proof that at the age of 57, Ferrigno still knows how to live up to his Hulk persona.

"I really watch what I eat and I still train with the same passion I've had for 50 years. Guys half my age can't keep up with me — I love it!" Ferrigno said.

As for the burning comic book question: could The Hulk take on X-Men's Wolverine in combat?

"The Hulk would smash Wolverine — he'd get him in a bear hug and it would be over!"

A smashing time

• Lou Ferrigno will appear at Fan Expo in Toronto Aug. 28 through 30. For more information, visit fanexpocanada.com

"At my daughter's wedding, everyone was dressed in white.

While giving my daughter away I felt like I had to pass gas.

Well I passed gas alright, only it wasn't gas. Guests at the wedding behind me just started snickering as the back of the white pants turned colour.

I just smiled and kept on as if nothing had happened through the rest of the service." - L. Higgins

Aykroyd ain't afraid of a Ghostbusters sequel

Dan Aykroyd says that seeing this year's Star Trek reboot has convinced him that a renewed Ghostbusters franchise could also live long and prosper.

"The old generation of Ghostbusters, we're getting hip replacements now ... We need a whole new cadre of cadets to get us through to a new generation."

Actor Dan Aykroyd on a possible new Ghostbusters movie

But Aykroyd warns that until he has a script for Ghostbusters 3 in his hands, nothing about the sequel is certain.

"I think this last Star Trek was great, they did a really fine job of revivifying those characters," Aykroyd told The Canadian Press in a telephone interview from his farm in Kingston, Ont.

"I'd like to see the torch get passed in sort of a Star Trek manner so that the franchise lives on."

Lee Eisenberg and Gene Stupnitsky — scribes for NBC's The Office — have signed on to write Ghostbusters 3. Aykroyd has said that he and other members of the original cast — including Bill Murray, Harold Ramis and Ernie Hudson — are on board to reprise their roles.

But Aykroyd still sounds cautious about the prospect of another film. "As (Ghostbusters director) Ivan Reitman says — and I quote him now — 'It's all just talk,'" Aykroyd said.

"That's pretty much what we can say. Until we can see a script, until we have casting, until we've got a production number," he added before trailing off. "I'm the biggest cheerleader. I think it's going to happen, but really it's just theory until the production number is stamped."

If the film does get made, Aykroyd figures it's time to crown a new generation of Ghostbusters.

"The old generation of Ghostbusters, we're getting hip replacements now, we can't lift the equipment anymore, the eyesight's fading, we can't drive the car, there's so many things that are just physically breaking down," he said. "We need a whole new cadre of cadets to get us through to a new generation."

Given Aykroyd's unwavering passion for the franchise, he's just as anxious about a sequel as the series' ardent fans.

The idea for the first film — which was released in 1984 and went on to fetch a domestic gross of almost $240 million — grew from Aykroyd's own fascination with the paranormal, which he inherited from his family.

The Tudors

This episode gives a whole new meaning to the term "doubting Thomas." As Henry (Jonathan Rhys Meyers) begins to feel remorse for having executed Sir Thomas More, Sir Thomas Cromwell (James Frain) sees his power growing. The queen (Natalie Dormer) is having insecurity issues of her own, which aren't helped by the French king's refusal to allow the infant Elizabeth to be betrothed to one of his relatives. 9 PM on CBC

Criminal Minds

Looking back on your childhood is usually filled with happy memories of pony rides, birthday parties and playing catch in the backyard. But not for Dr. Reid (Matthew Gray Gubler). This week, the good doctor embarks on his own investigation into the murder of a boy in Las Vegas years earlier that he strongly believes has a connection to his own childhood. Jane Lynch ("Two and a Half Men") guest stars as Dr. Reid's mother, Diana, in "Memoriam." 9 PM on CBS

Oprah planning NYC bash?

WITH A BANG Oprah Winfrey is planning to shut down parts of a New York City highway next year for a mammoth block party to celebrate the tenth anniversary of her magazine, femalefirst.co.uk reports.

The media mogul launched O, The Oprah Magazine nine years ago — and is planning a major party for next May to celebrate the long-running title.

According to E! Online, Winfrey is looking to shut down portions of the city's West Side Highway for a block party for all her fans — in addition to a star-studded musical revue scheduled at Radio City Music Hall.

A City Hall official has confirmed Winfrey has made permit enquiries for the event; however, the star has so far refused to confirm any details.

Her spokesperson said, “While it is too soon to discuss specifics, we are looking forward to celebrating in a big way.”

Jon: Reality show an obligation

WORSE THAN A DAY JOB? Jon Gosselin wouldn't mind punching the clock instead of appearing on a hit TLC reality show, usmagazine.com reports.

“I wish I had a 9 to 5 job instead of the nightmare I'm living. This is 24/7,” he told usmagazine.com outside his $1.1-million US Pennsylvania home Monday. “I don't even want to do taping for the show anymore.”

But Gosselin says he's stuck filming and doing promotional appearances to make as much money as possible. (A source also tells the current issue of Us Weekly that he's “suspicious” Kate is hiding cash ahead of their divorce proceedings. They make an estimated $75,000 US per episode.)

“I have two houses and eight children to take care of and I need to work,” he told Us. METRO NEWS SERVICES

Move over Liam, MiCy's got a new guy

SERIAL DATER? The last we heard about Miley Cyrus' dating life was less than a week ago when he was reportedly spotted sharing a kiss with Liam Hemsworth, her onscreen love interest in the upcoming flick The Last Song, online.com reports.

But whatever the two may have had going on wasn't serious, the website muses. Within a couple of hours of landing back in L.A. from the Georgia set, Cyrus was on a date with a new guy, online.com added.

The 16-year-old starlet went to the Kings of Leon concert with Carter Jenkins, 17, an actor she briefly dated before she was with underwear model Justin Gaston.

Shortly after Cyrus and Jenkins arrived for the star-studded show, security escorted them to join Justin Timberlake and Jessica Biel in the best seats in the house — the technician's booth.

Later, the foursome was spotted going backstage for a VIP after-party.

Carter tweeted after the concert, “KOL killed it. Awesome show & very fun night with MiCy @miley Cyrus.”

Melanie's third rehab stint

BACKSLIDE Melanie Griffith is in rehab, femalefirst.co.uk reports.

The website says the 52-year-old actress has checked into Utah's Cirque Lodge — where Lindsay Lohan and Kirsten Dunst previously received treatment — to be treated for an undisclosed condition.

Her representative Robin Baum said: "She is there to reinforce her commitment to stay healthy. This is part of a routine plan that was designed between her and her doctors years ago."

This is Griffith's third stint in a treatment centre. In 1988, she checked in to a facility to help her battle addictions to alcohol and cocaine. In 2000, she sought help for an addiction to painkillers which she developed after taking medication for a neck injury, the gossip website says.

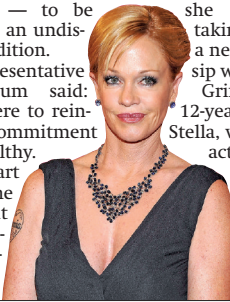

Griffith — who has a 12-year-old daughter, Stella, with her husband, actor Antonio Banderas — has previously said her family has been instrumental in helping her deal with her personal problems. She also has a 24-year-old son, Alexander, and 19-year-old daughter, Dakota, from previous relationships.

It has been claimed her latest stay in rehab came at the insistence of Banderas, who feared her life was spiralling out of control.

A source is quoted by gossip blogger Perez Hilton as saying: "The reason Melanie checked in was her husband was demanding that she get clean and sober. He told her that if she didn't get the help she needed it would be the end of their marriage."

embodies the essence of international style, at home in Rome or London, but not out of place in Nashville or Inglewood, and equally well suited to South Africa and Australia," promotional material for the new outfits explained.

Jessica's dog a 'lesbian lova'?

WILD IMAGINATION Jessica Simpson thinks her dog is a lesbian. The singer-and-actress claims her multi-poo pooch Daisy — which was a gift from ex-husband Nick Lachey — has found happiness with a hound called Bella, femalefirst.co.uk reports.

Alongside a dimly-lit picture of the dogs, Simpson, 29, tweeted: "Daisy and her best friend Bella back together again. Lesbian lovas forever! (sic)"

While Daisy has found love, Simpson is still bitter she's single after being dumped by football star Tony Romo. It was recently reported she had paid a witch she met on the Internet to put a curse on her ex-boyfriend.

A source said: "They lit a candle, burned some incense and performed a couple of incantations."

Jen uses boy-toys for fame?

THE RICH AND THE FAMOUS It seems fitting that Jennifer Aniston has been spotted holding hands with Gerard Butler. Friends of the actress say she pursues only guys who can keep her as high-profile as possible, us-magazine.com reports.

"Jennifer won't date a normal guy," a source told the current issue of Us Weekly of the 40-year-old actress. "She goes after the hottest thing of the moment, what she knows will get her the most time in the spotlight," the insider continued.

Aniston is currently filming The Bounty Hunter with Gerard Butler, who starred in The Ugly Truth. Before that, she pursued Bradley Cooper, who anchored The Hangover, which has earned more than $400 million US worldwide since hitting theatres in June.

She's also dated John Mayer (who won five Grammys in 2009 alone) and was married to Brad Pitt.
